AROUND the TOWNSHIP

William Helm, manager of the Niles Theatre, is wearing a big broad grin these days.

He's got the laugh now. After dishing it out for months—at last he can take it.

Bill hit the pool to the tune of fifty smackers when he drew 7 to 0 on the St. Mary's-Santa Clara game last Sunday in Kezar Stadium.

Yeh, Man. And is Bill leaving!

Laddie, a German shepherd police dog, dark, with a few tan marks, was listed as lost strayed or stolen. But—

Laddie came home after several days' absence—minus his collar. He was so tired and hungry that he ate two cans of dog food and a can of carrots, slept the entire day, not even rousing to welcome the family home as is his custom.

Mr. and Mrs. James S. Cull are mighty tickled to have him back home again.

Over Irvington way, the common sentiment seems to be "believe it or not, Santa Claus has come to town."

And, who wouldn't feel that way under the same set of given circumstances?

Our best wishes to the officials of the Steiger and Kerr Stove and Foundry Company and here's hoping they get going soon after December 15.

There's room in these here parts for more industries and a mighty vote of thanks goes to O. N. Hirsch whose finger has been very prominently in the pie.

No chlorination for a community's water supply is, in the parlance of those who know, not so good.

So, while the tests of the water used by Niles to date has been excellent, nevertheless we have it firsthand from one of the sanitary detail who participated in the survey here on Tuesday with the graduate students of U. C. that chlorination of the water supply will be recommended.

Not an immediate need, perhaps, but a safeguard against a sudden epidemic of typhoid or some other contagious fever.

A skit was presented by the Newark troop and George Coit presided at the court of honor.

High School Youth Finds Meteorograph Released By Plane

NILES—Roy Rose, 17, son of Chester Rose of Morrison Canyon and a Washington Union High School student is anticipating a reward of "from one to twenty dollars" from the U. S. Weather Bureau for finding a radio meteorograph released by a plane from the Oakland Airport on Monday night.

The meteorograph was found attached to part of the balloon and the red silk parachute which brought the instrument to earth. The paraphernalia was found by Roy while quail hunting. It was laying on top of a dead horse.

The meteorographs are released from planes and ascend by means of the balloon to which they are attached. The balloon bursts when it has attained a certain height, returning the instrument (a metal tube) to earth. While in the air the instrument acts as a radio, broadcasting temperature, air moisture at heights through which it has passed. This information is received on the ground.

Due to the fact that the instruments can sometimes be used more than once, a reward of from one to twenty dollars is offered to persons finding them and returning them.

The instrument found by Roy was turned over to the Niles post-office for mailing to the Weather Bureau.

Business Women May Be Interested In Organizing Club

CENTERVILLE — Efforts to organize a Business and Professional Women's Club in Washington Township are being made by the Hayward and Livermore clubs, according to a notice appearing this week in a metropolitan paper. It is stated numerous requests have been made by business women who would like to belong to such an organization but who cannot travel to Hayward or Livermore for meetings.

Several business women were approached on the subject recently by Mrs. Cyril Roche of Hayward and the consensus of opinion seems to be that there are sufficient business and professional women in the district to form a club.

The proposed new organization will be discussed at a joint meeting of the Hayward and Livermore clubs at Dublin on Nov. 29. The guest speakers at that time will be Mrs. Maude Empey, national education chairman; Miss Florence Stahl, state second vice-president and Miss Alice Andrews, district membership chairman. Miss Alice Haar is president of the Hayward club.

DECOTO MAN HEADS COUNTY TRUSTEES

DECOTO—H. F. Harold, member of the Decoto Grammar School and the Washington Union High School boards of trustees, has been elected president of the Alameda County School Trustees Association.

Other officers are Louis L. Hecce of Berkeley, vice president; Edward S. Perry of the Castro Valley school board, secretary-treasurer.

First Implement For Rental To Be Bought By Center

CENTERVILLE — Plans for the annual Christmas party, the January meeting, an outline of the coming year's program and a decision to purchase a manure spreader for the Center were included in Tuesday night's meeting of the Washington-Eden Farm Center.

A committee consisting of Anthony Silva, Paul Dougherty and Ted Harvey was appointed to spend not more than $340 for a manure spreader. This will be financed through the Alameda County Farm Bureau and will be available for rental by members of the center, rental expected to repay the cost of purchase.

The Christmas party committee consists of Manuel Almeida, Mrs. Paul Dougherty, Anthony Silva and the program will be given by the 4-H Clubs.

President Joseph C. Shinn, Jr., announced that W. D. Patterson, president of the Alameda County Water District, would be the speaker at the January meeting. There will also be a discussion of the tomato situation and the apricot, prorate which was promoted last year.

Projects for the coming year were mentioned as follows by Shinn: Investigation of dehydrating apricots, discussion of farm wage scales, study of cost of apricot production and of taxation problems.

Speakers for the evening were A. D. Borden of the Division of Extension of the University of California; C. E. Scott, of the Department of Entomology and Pete Meyers, assistant Farm Adviser. Borden discussed control of plant diseases and Scott, insect infestations. Meyers discussed the soil conservation program and said that Alameda County had been given a Class A rating, giving growers the privilege of diverting crops and receiving federal pay for cover crops.

A total of 85 members signed up for this year was reported. A goal of more than 200 has been set in order to retain the Farm Bureau bell captured last year. Manuel Almeida suggested that members see the committee and not wait to be called upon.

Driver Alive After Wreck Demolishes Truck And Tractor

MISSION SAN JOSE—Lynford Peck, 35, of 2511 1st, Sacramento suffered concussion, head lacerations and other cuts and bruises when his truck failed to negotiate a turn on the Mission Hills Road a half mile east of Mission San Jose Monday afternoon. He was treated by Dr. E. M. Grimmer of Irvington and taken to the San Jose hospital.

The accident took place in the same spot where 17 CCC boys were injured when a truck overturned and rolled over the embankment about three years ago.

Peck's truck and a tractor it was carrying were demolished. About 50 feet of guard rail was torn out and a tree four-feet in diameter was uprooted. Pieces of the truck were scattered along the bank and to the creek bank 50 feet below. It was said Peck's boots had to be cut off before he could be extricated from the wreck.

The tractor was being moved from Sacramento by the Union Paving Company of San Francisco to the home field at Santa Clara. It was part of the equipment which had been used at work at the Sacramento airport.

Peck was taken to the hospital by the Chapel of the Palms ambulance.

Science Students Gather Data Here In Sanitary Survey

NILES — "How do you heat your bath-water?" "What becomes of your garbage?" "How many rooms in your house and what do you pay for rent?" "What about Old Town?"

These were some of the questions fired at Niles residents Tuesday by 20 graduate students of the class in Sanitary Science of the University of California who descended upon the town with notebook and pencil to find out "the truth about Niles, a typical small town in a rural community."

Reports of the survey were given at a dinner at the faculty club Wednesday night with Dr. K. F. Meyer, bacteriologist, in charge. The reports which will mention both favorable and unfavorable data gathered will not be made public.

The party in Niles Tuesday was composed of students in the Sanitary Science class taught by Harold F. Gray. Others at the luncheon served at the Florence Restaurant at noon included Dr. I. O. Church, Alameda County Health Officer; Harry Bliss, county sanitary inspector; Roland Bendel, local representative of the Mosquito Abatement District and others.

Washington Huskers Defeat Livermore On Armistice Day

CENTERVILLE — Continuing their steady march toward a record of no defeats and the championship of the Santa Clara Valley Athletic League, the Washington Union High School was victor in the annual Armistice Day game with Livermore last Friday. The score was 7-0.

Patriotic exercises were conducted prior to the game before the largest crowd ever assembled in Livermore for a football game. Proceeds of the affair are to be donated to welfare work at the U. S. Veterans Hospital at Livermore. The program was sponsored by the American Legion Posts of Livermore and Washington Township and their affiliated groups including the Auxiliaries and the Sons of the Legion.

Correa, Livermore quarter, fumbled on the 32-yard line and Gaunt, Centerville guard, recovered. Ahm, plunging Cornhusker fullback, smashed through for short gains, finally going over from the six-inch line. Mellow, Centerville quarter, picked a hole for a running play good for the extra point.

GROUP MEMBERSHIPS BOOST RED CROSS FUND IN TOWNSHIP

NILES—The Japanese Association of Washington Township at Alvarado has sent in 81 memberships in the annual roll call of the Red Cross, according to Mrs. C. N. Myrick, township chairman. A letter accompanying the check for $81 from F. Kato said that S. Toda, secretary, had worked untiringly during the campaign to assist the roll call.

All citizens of the township are asked to join in the contribution of $1 membership to assist in carrying on the peace-time work of the Red Cross. Committees are at work in each town but all citizens are asked to contact the sub-chairmen or Mrs. Myrick at Niles and not wait for a visit from the workers, due to the shortness of time this year.

The roll call will close on Thanksgiving Day.

Decoto Residents Protest Location Of Sewerage Farm

DECOTO — Protests of residents of Decoto regarding the proposed site of the sewerage disposal plant on the Creek Road were expected to be answered by reports of representatives of the State Department of Public Health who have been making tests of soil and drainage for the past two days.

A public hearing attended by about 50 people was held at the Hayward City Hall Wednesday afternoon with Dr. Walter Dickie, director of the State Department of Public Health, presiding. Protestors claim that because of drainage, unpleasant odors and the psychological results of having the sewerage disposal plant located at the point selected, on the Henry Garcia ranch a quarter of a mile west of the Decoto Road on the Creek Road, real estate values will be lowered and residents of the surrounding 12 or more small farms will be inconvenienced.

Engineers for the Decoto Sanitary District claim that with a modern sewerage disposal plant there will be no unpleasant odors, that it will be much farther away from wells than are present cess pools and that with proper landscaping the disposal plant will be an asset to the appearance of the countryside.

Among those who sent letters to the Department of Public Health protesting the site of the plant were F. C. Harvey, L. E. Bailey, Manuel Maciel, Jesse Perry, Harvey Grainger and others. It is understood they are not opposing the sewerage system but merely the location selected.

J. P. Calderia, president of the Sanitary Board of Decoto, states that after surveying the entire territory, the present 15 acres was selected because of the drainage, slope of the land and its distance from residences. Some of those living nearest the site are not complaining, he says.

Yesterday and today, representatives of the State Department of Public Health are building a test settling pool to determine the degree of evaporation and absorption and if these two points are found to be satisfactory, it is probable that they will grant the permit for the construction and maintenance of the system.

The Sanitary Board, confident that their program to establish a $100,000 sewer system will go forward, met Wednesday night to arrange for the selling of the remaining $52,000 in bonds of the $56,000 bond issue voted three years ago. A federal grant of $45,000 has been secured but work must begin within three weeks to retain the grant.

The Decoto Chamber of Commerce at a meeting Wednesday night gave a vote of confidence to the Sanitary Board, backing them up in the site selected.

FIRE DESTROYS ROOF OF HOME NEAR POTTERY WORKS

NILES — Damage estimated at $500 resulted from a fire Sunday morning at the Frank Rolleg home near the California Pottery Co., in Niles Canyon. The blaze which destroyed the roof was thought to have started from a defective chimney, according to Assistant Chief Clarence Crane of the Niles Fire Department.

Rolleg was at a neighbor's when he noticed flames bursting from the roof of his home. Practically all household goods were removed without damage.

PUBLIC INVITED TO CARD PARTY

ALVARADO — The Ladies Aid of Alvarado will give a card party. The public is invited, according to Miss Mary Hughes, chairman.

IRVINGTON — A deal has been consummated between the Reid Brothers Manufacturing Company at Irvington and the Steiger and Kerr Stove and Foundry Company of San Francisco and work on additions to the present building here will begin immediately, according to Jack H. Sattler, owner of controlling stock.

The plant will represent a total investment of approximately $400,000 and will employ about 100 men. Local labor, skilled and otherwise, will be given preference. The plant which has been located at 18th and Folsom street, San Francisco, will be moved to Irvington after December 15. Occidental stoves and heaters and hospital furniture will be manufactured.

The Steiger and Kerr Stove and Foundry Company has been in operation for 78 years. It was recently bought by a company of which Mr. Sattler, his brother, George A. Sattler and W. C. Gaffers of Los Angeles are major stock holders. The new company has no stock to sell.

Mr. Sattler was given a dinner recently at Sophia's Tavern, arranged by O. N. Hirsch who has been instrumental in bringing the new plant to Irvington. This affair was attended by more than 50 Irvington business men and prominent business men of the Bay cities.

Mr. Sattler formerly lived in Newark. Mrs. Sattler, his wife, is a daughter of Mrs. Matie Bole, first postmaster of Newark, who retired several years ago and was succeeded by Miss Julia Ruschin, present postmaster. They have many friends in this section who will welcome them. They reside in Los Angeles and at Burlingame.

Mr. Sattler is a man of many and varied interests. He owns a racing stable at Bay Meadows and is the owner of such famous horses as Bunny Martin, Auxiliary, Sadie X, Wedding Call and Mary Nell. He also owns a 127,000 ranch 60 miles north of Los Angeles near Gorman on the old ridge route from the southern city. Here he raises grain and cattle.

He has been in the foundry business since he was 15 years of age and that has been for more than one would guess from his alert energy and youthful vigor. He is also a part of the Gaffers and Sattler firm of Los Angeles, manufacturers of gas ranges and electric refrigerators.

After buying the Steiger and Kerr Stove and Foundry Company of San Francisco, because of the desire to enlarge the plant, he decided to move and was interested in the Irvington site by Mr. Hirsch.

The Reid Brothers Manufacturing Plant here was built about 15 years ago. The building covers 56,000 square feet in four acres of ground. It was originally a $250,000 investment in which many residents of Irvington were financially interested. The land and $20,000 was donated by Irvington residents at the beginning of the business.

The deal was recently consummated between Mr. Sattler and Philip Ablan, general manager of the Reid Brothers Manufacturing Company, now operating in San Francisco.

Housing for workmen at the plant will necessitate a building program for Irvington. Several local real estate men and contractors are already considering plans for the construction of new homes.

SEEK ADDITIONAL VOTING PRECINCT

IRVINGTON — An additional voting precinct is being sought for Irvington, according to reports from this week's meeting of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Secretary Vernon Leal was instructed to write Supervisor George Hellwig pointing out that of the 577 registered voters in the community, 459 voted at the last election. There are now two precincts, one at Maple Hall and one at the Chamber of Commerce building.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by
CARTER FIELD

Observers begin to doubt President Roosevelt's sagacity as a political strategist . . . The late Louis Howe seems to be missed . . . The President's blast against the Dies committee likely to have its effect on labor and political situation for some time to come.

WASHINGTON. — There are a good many observers who are beginning to suspect that President Roosevelt is not as shrewd a political strategist as he was a few years back. They blame this on two factors. By far the more important is the fact that the President no longer has his famous "No Man" in Louis McHenry Howe. But also important is the fact that Jim Farley is almost disregarded so far as broad strategy is concerned.

Howe's tremendous value to the President cannot be exaggerated.

Right up to the time of his death he never hesitated to cross his beloved chief. He could say things to him which no one else would dare to mention. A virtual lifetime of devotion, so unselfish and self-effacing as to be classic, gave him this privilege. There is no doubt that he prevented Roosevelt from doing a great many things which would have been politically inexpedient. His wisdom was simply uncanny. His "feel" for a state situation was beyond belief. He was almost never fooled.

This does not mean that he always prevailed. For example he opposed to the utmost of his ability the trip Roosevelt made to the Pacific coast in the 1932 campaign. Howe knew that it was not necessary. He was against such a tremendous risk. He knew the possibility that Roosevelt, in a vigorous gesture, might actually fall down physically. This, Howe and most of Roosevelt's advisers, feared as one of the worst "breaks" that could happen against them.

Not that it would prove anything so far as Roosevelt's ability to be President was concerned, but they were terribly afraid of the possibility that the public might come to believe Roosevelt was physically unable, because of his infantile paralysis, to cope with the strain the presidency would impose.

But this failure to deter Roosevelt was the exception, not the rule. Normally Howe's advice would prevail, especially as it was generally reinforced by Mrs. Roosevelt's judgment, the First Lady having the most extraordinary respect for Howe's political judgment.

This failure to deter Roosevelt was the exception, not the rule. Normally Howe's advice would prevail, especially as it was generally reinforced by Mrs. Roosevelt's judgment, the First Lady having the most extraordinary respect for Howe's political judgment.

Howe Usually Was Right In His Political Moves

Observers are insisting that a "purge" would never have been attempted had Louis Howe been alive. This of course is pure supposition, but it is based on the knowledge on the part of men who knew Howe well that Howe never, in his whole life, approved a political move which turned out badly in the end. Incidentally it is common knowledge that Jim Farley did not approve the idea, but was unable to dissuade the President.

Conversation on this point of Roosevelt's political advice revived recently because of the President's intervention in the Pennsylvania situation, right after his blast at the Dies committee. In each case, observers believe, the President did neither himself nor his friends any political good.

As far as the Dies committee is concerned, about everything that could have been done to make that committee's work ineffective had already been done by experts. It was not necessary for the President, those holding this view contend, to attack the committee so ponderously, and thus awaken distrust on the part of a great many of his followers out in the country whose only doubt about the President himself is a suspicion that he is too friendly to the extremely radical elements.

In the Pennsylvania case the President, it is pointed out, actually intervened to help Charles Alvin Jones, against whom Judge Arthur H. James was running for governor. But the President's letter of protest did not mention Jones' name. On the contrary, it did mention the name of George H. Earle, with approval.

Military Preparedness To Proceed In Earnest

More military preparedness, protection against an evil day, is assured. Not only is the President for it, but congress is behind him on this. This means more war construction, airplanes and warships as well as military supplies, with cargo ships, pretty nearly No. 1 on the entire list. The strategic hooking up of big power plants to guard against sabotaging efforts by foreign agents already is being studied—will be carried out.

Much heavier federal expenditures, further complicating the treasury's existing need for heavier taxes, are sure. So that the new tax bill, with a probable lowering of the present income exemption limits and boosting of the middle class rates, must be harsher than anticipated. There will be an intensive search for new sources of revenue. Strain of the federal treasury may be softened a little by transfer of present relief workers to private pay rolls as orders mount. But the relief will only be borrowing from Peter to pay Paul—the federal treasury will be footing the bill.

Financing overseas shipments, whether to neutrals or belligerents, will be one of the most vexing of all the many problems on the now obvious agenda. Recollection of the war debts never paid, and of the defaulted interest on foreign bonds, is keen, but there will be terrific pressure from business and labor to find some way of financing sales.

Emergency powers for the President in time of stress would seem to be in order. They would have been granted by congress without hesitation just a short time back. Now the whole thing is problematical. Senators who beat the purge are important. Distrust of the President's advisers, the Corcorans, and Cohens and Hopkins, has reached an all-time high on Capitol Hill. Short of actual war, the tendency of congress will be to keep a tight rein.

General Lack of Interest Shown in Recent Election

Campaign contributions proved the general lack of interest in the recent national election. Republican and anti-New Deal Democrats among business men apparently were willing to contribute to the campaigns of James J. Davis for reelection as senator in Pennsylvania, and of Judge Arthur H. James for governor of the Keystone state. They were willing to contribute to Robert A. Taft's campaign fund in Ohio for senator against Robert J. Bulkley, but became very parsimonious when asked to contribute to the national fund, to the considerable embarrassment of Republican National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton.

Effects of the blast President Roosevelt launched against the Dies committee will ramify and continue to affect both political and labor situations for the next two years. In fact it is almost impossible to exaggerate the consequences.

The President, in effect, made the sit-down strike, and Gov. Frank Murphy's handling of it, the paramount issue in the recent gubernatorial campaign. So far as most of the rest of the country was concerned the whole point in Michigan was whether its voters approved the sit-down strike.

This was true despite the President's careful phraseology in his blast at the Dies committee; for example his denial that at any time Murphy had expressed "condonation" of such strikes, or "any illegal practice."

Those last quoted words stirred up a lot of conversation in Washington. The point was, especially in view of the fact that the statement was carefully written out before being given to the newspapers, whether the President meant to imply that sit-down strikes were not "illegal," or whether he merely wished to avoid that discussion. It will be recalled that when the activities of Governor Murphy on the sit-down strikes were front page news, Frances Perkins, Roosevelt's secretary of labor, commented that such strikes had not been "proven unconstitutional."

Caused Garner's First Break With President

It will also be recalled that it was over the sit-down strikes in which Murphy figured that the first serious break between the President and Vice President John Nance Garner occurred. Garner's sharp criticisms to friends on Capitol Hill over the White House attitude about this resulted in a rallying to the Texan which has since made him one of the outstanding conservative candidates for the White House.

Yet the best information obtainable is that the President did not issue his blast for the purpose of making the Michigan electorate a political barometer on the sit-down strike. He did it simply and solely because he thought it the most effective way in which he could extend help to Murphy in his campaign, and yet avoid doing a lot of things he did not want to do, some of which would have been decidedly embarrassing.

For months the President had been under terrific pressure to go to this and that state to aid sorely harried Democratic nominees. One state in particular, which it would have been most embarrassing for him to visit, is Wisconsin. To have made a trip to Michigan for a speech in behalf of Murphy, which is what the Murphy management wanted, would have been apparently to ignore deliberately the plight of hard-pressed Democratic Sen. F. Ryan Duffy, whom the La Follettes were trying to polish off. Duffy has been a 100 per cent New Dealer, but Roosevelt is not anxious to antagonize the La Follettes. Hence the Dies committee blast.

Britain Holds Fate of Jews In Holy Land

20th Century Holy War Rocks the 'Cradle of Religion'

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

At its extremities the ancient land of Palestine is 160 miles long and 70 miles wide. That an area so small should have nurtured three of the world's greatest religions is an historical and geographic phenomenon.

Thus we know that almost a thousand years before Christ the Hebrew tribes of Palestine recognized a national god, the wrathful Jehovah. We know even better how the Christ child was born in Bethlehem several centuries later, marking the start of modern Christianity. Less familiar is the story of Mohammedism, which from an inauspicious start in the Holy Land has spread until it is now embraced by a tenth of the world's population.

But if this is phenomenal, it is even more shocking to realize that the cradle of religion, the traditional home of peaceful prophets and philosophers, is now in the midst of a modern "holy war" in which the ghosts of half-forgotten traditions have come home to roost.

Down through the centuries, Hebrews, Christians and Arabs found their freedom threatened and destroyed by successive waves of invaders. It is recalled that in 1100 B. C., upon their return from Egypt, the Israelites held sway over Palestine and retained that power almost unbroken until the Roman invasion of 63 B. C. Though Jews have since been dispersed throughout the world, they have not forgotten their "promised land" and the hope that some day they might return.

Britain the Liberator

Christianity came next and prospered temporarily despite the despotic Roman rule. Then, from Arabia to the south, came a new wave of religion known as Mohammedism. Its followers swept into Palestine, threw over the Roman regime and became masters of the Holy Land. But in the Seventh century even the Arabs were overcome by Ottoman Turks and until the World War Palestine remained under Turkish domination.

Today Palestine happens to be one of Great Britain's numerous problems. The modern background of this problem dates back to 1915 when the British were scurrying around for allies. To help defeat Turkey they enlisted Arabic support and in 1917 marched triumphantly into Jerusalem. In return Sir Henry McMahon, British high commissioner for Egypt, had promised the sheriff of Mecca that Arabs would be given their independence.

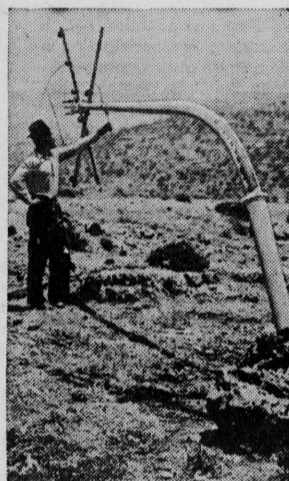

But Great Britain forgot this promise under the pressure of war. Crafty Lord Balfour saw the value of Jewish monetary support. With Dr. Chaim Weizmann, leader of the Zionist movement, he won the British cabinet over to a plan whereby Palestine would be installed as a national home for Jews once the war was finished. The famous Balfour declaration of November, 1917, was followed by a League of Nations mandate giving Great Britain control over the Holy Land.

Arabs Cite Their Claim

But how about the Arabs? For 13 centuries their ancestors have tilled Palestine soil. They fought in the World War against Turkey under promise of freedom if the allies won. Since the war their national population of 325,000 has remained substantially unchanged, while a huge influx of persecuted Jews from European nations has swelled Hebrew population from 75,000 to 375,000. Arabic resentment has grown since 1918 and has now turned to terrorist methods of opposition.

Under Great Britain's original partition plan Jews are confined largely to the western and northern parts of Palestine. But although Arabs get the larger portion, they also receive the less fertile land.

A broken down telephone line with its steel pole bent over, between Nablus and Jenin, is evidence of the violence and sabotage featuring Palestine's Arab-Jewish warfare.

Moreover they protest that Jewish immigration and development must cease or Arabs will soon be in the minority, completely under Hebrew control.

Based on 20 years' experience since the World War, this fear may be well founded. Enthusiastic Jewry, happy over its long-sought national home, has invested countless thousands of dollars in the Holy Land, building modern cities like Tel Aviv which has mushroomed from 50,000 to 150,000 population since 1931.

Zionists Seek Farmers

Arabs might also base their fears on the Jew's native aggressiveness in commerce and industry. Even the Zionists themselves fear this trait, because they want Palestine Hebrews to become farmers, not city tradesmen. But they also count heavily on Jewish patronage from other nations in developing Palestine's world trade, which will consist largely of citrus exports.

If Great Britain could promise that her Jewish protectorate would not eventually control the Holy Land, Arabs might be partially pacified and might stop their policy of terrorism which has taken about 1,500 lives since July 5. But world events have given the Arabs strength during recent months. Since the treaty of Munich, where Great Britain capitulated to Jew-hating Germany and Italy, Arabs have carried on a ruthless campaign of warfare in which they receive the nodding assent of dictatorial nations. Moreover they are encouraged by—and envious of—the freedom granted Arabs in Egypt, Iraq and Syria. A mighty surge of nationalistic feeling now prevails throughout the Moslem world.

Britain has already limited Hebrew migration to 1,000 people a month in the face of wholesale Jewish expulsion from all central European countries. Within the past two years she has sent two investigating commissions to the Holy Land, both of them returning without a solution. Since the Munich treaty, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain has been anxious to settle this Palestine problem partially as appeasement for Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini.

Such an allegedly "weak-kneed" policy has heaped bitter American scorn on Prime Minister Chamberlain, not only from Jewish leaders but prominent statesmen and churchmen. Sorely pressed, British have retaliated that the United States is welcome to her Palestine mandate if she can do a better job with a hopeless problem.

HEALTH

Progress made in perfecting new aids for hard-of-hearing.

By Dr. James W. Barton

WHEN glasses were first used the main thought was to magnify or enlarge print or other objects so that they could be more readily seen. Gradually glasses were improved so that shortsightedness or longsightedness was corrected, then astigmatism (where rays of light do not focus to a single point due to a defect in the curvature of the lens of the eye), then weakness of any of the muscles controlling the eyeball; finally double vision lenses, one for reading and one for distance, were produced, and finally contact lenses, which are fitted beneath the eyelids and do away with the need of frames.

It would seem that there is the same process of development giving aid to those who are hard of hearing. We all remember the large horn that the hard of hearing carried not so many years ago, which was held toward anyone trying to speak to them. Just as the first glasses magnified, or increased the ability to see an object, so the horn increased or gathered the sound so that it could be more readily heard. Then followed various types of hearing aids, electrical and mechanical, some of which helped certain cases but were unsatisfactory in others. And just as glasses for the eyes were made to correct more than poor or weak vision, so the new aids for hearing are now manufactured to correct different "types" of hard of hearing.

New Electric Device.

An editorial in Laryngoscope states: "Great improvements in electric hearing aids are being made with surprising rapidity. Among recent advances in this field the most important is the development of 'selective' amplification (increase in the hearing) by which the units of a portable carbon microphone hearing device of variable amplifying power at different pitches are assembled in such combination as will best meet the special requirements of the individual as shown by his audiogram."

The audiogram is the chart on which the audiometer (the hearing test machine) has marked the hearing ability of the individual at different ranges of sound.

The day has now arrived when ear specialists are able to advise the patient as to his needs and these needs can, to a great extent, be met by these new hearing devices.

'Imbalance' of Muscles Causes Eyestrain

Eye specialists (oculists) tell us that what is commonly called eyestrain may be due to other conditions than overuse of the eyes or reading in a poor light. Thus Dr. John V. V. Nicholls, Montreal, states in the Canadian Medical Association Journal that eyestrain proper means manifestations in the eyeball itself, in the ability to see, and in the body as a whole. Disturbances due to reading too much or reading in a poor light are relieved by removing these irritating conditions, whereas symptoms affecting the eyeball, seeing ability, and the general health give rise to much more disturbance.

The ocular or eyeball symptoms are dull heaviness over the eyes, itchy and burning sensations in the margins of the lids, and sometimes redness of the eyeball.

The visual or "seeing" symptoms are more or less prolonged attacks of blurred vision. There may be periods of double vision (seeing two objects instead of one.)

Among the systemic symptoms, due to a disturbance which interferes with the eyes working together properly, are faintness and dizziness.

Treatment Takes Time.

Dr. Nicholls states that all these systemic symptoms are due to an "imbalance" of the muscles which control or move the eyeball and can be corrected if treatment of this muscle imbalance is properly carried out. This treatment may require considerable time and perhaps much home work on the part of the patient, but the results are very satisfactory.

Further, just as the oculist advises the patient to rid himself of any infection present—teeth, tonsils, sinuses—before having the eyes tested for glasses, so it is suggested that as "temporary" muscle imbalances are not uncommon after influenza or other depressing ailments, a reasonable time should be allowed for the condition to correct itself before beginning any treatment.

"Treatment, based on the above principles, carried out with patience and persistence, will be found very successful."

Ideal Woman Is Matter of Man's Taste

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

EVERY man cherishes in his heart a vision of an Ideal Woman. Naturally this woman is beautiful! Beautiful according to his individual estimate of feminine loveliness. She is usually a vision of perfect contour, lovely stature. Her skin is fresh and radiant and her hair is lustrous. Her hands are soft and capable while her eyes sparkle with vitality and silent wisdom!

Yes, Man's Ideal Woman is a composite of all beauty and all the feminine graces. Not only does her physical beauty satisfy his eye, but her voice is music to his ears. The quality of her mind intrigues him, and her soul—that intangible something every person possesses—is his inspiration.

Through life, Man seeks this creature of divine loveliness. For her he lives, works and plans. This Ideal Woman is the animating power behind progress and activity, and the closer you resemble her the more joyous and abundant will be your life!

If you wish for love, admiration, success, happiness—Be beautiful! Delight in the joy of feminine power which comes from the knowledge that you are a creature of charm and that your personality is compelling!

Analyze Your Beauty Assets

Success in whatever you desire from life lies in your determination to make the most of yourself—to glorify your birthright!

So many women give up too easily. Just because they were not born with permanent waves in their hair, or with legs like the famous Dietrich's, they let themselves grow discouraged. They don't take time to analyze their own beauty assets.

Perhaps a woman has a crooked nose which causes her no end of dismay. But her voice might be so beautifully pitched that by concentrating on it she could so fascinate others that they wouldn't be aware of the crooked nose! Impossible? Not at all!

Every woman is born with some physical beauty and a few compelling characteristics. The Perfect Woman does not exist. Each woman should strive to accent her good points and to dim her less glamorous ones. She who does that successfully comes near to being one man's Ideal Woman. The art of keeping the external you beautiful, and the inner you lovely at the same time, is worth striving for. Look around you. Isn't the woman who has mastered that art getting pretty much what she wants from life?

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Most of us have some opportunity for getting out-of-doors and being active one way or the other—playing games, being interested in a sport for exercise, gardening, or bicycling. There are numerous ways to work off that excess poundage and bring your measurements down to appealing lines.

If you are not active out-of-doors in games or sports, then you must do daily calisthenics, preferably in the open air, simple corrective ones planned for the particular parts of your body which you wish to proportion nicely.

Cat Puts Out Lights Before Taking Snooze

CLEVELAND.—Meet Teddy the cat. Part Angora and Persian, Teddy has a few human instincts. Besides eating at the table with his owners, the cat unlatches the screen door when he wishes to go out and pulls the bedroom light cord before taking a snooze. When hungry he rattles a can opener hung on a string.

'CANADA JACK' PAID HIGH IN ENGLAND

Feats of Strength Put Him In Higher Brackets.

LONDON.—One of the strongest men in Britain today is Martin Lissberg, better known as "Canada Jack."

He can break a six-inch nail with his bare hands in 50 seconds, and as a paver and layer of curbstones on big road schemes up and down the country, he can afford to smoke good cigars, pay $300 a year income tax, and keep 10 men busy year in and year out handling what he calls lightweight curbstones he hasn't time to touch, because he is so busy handling the really heavy stuff.

He is believed to be the only man in the world at his particular job capable of putting into position undisturbed a 10½ foot long granite curbstone, weighing 100 pounds per foot.

"Canada Jack" is 5 feet 6½ inches of bone and muscles and says that the only man who ever gave him a thrashing was his father.

"And that was when I was a boy of nine in Canada, where I was born," he said.

"My father, standing over 6 feet 2 inches, was the strongest man I ever encountered. I ran away from home after he gave me a licking and, after spending years at sea in windjammers and sailing boats of all kinds, I discovered that I was capable of lifting extremely heavy weights.

"So I took on a job of setting curbstones into position on a reservoir scheme at Staines (12 miles west of London). It is a job which cannot be done by machinery, and recently I have worked on virtually every important road and building in the country.

"Now I am engaged in the construction of a big factory in Lancashire. It was during the construction of the great East Lancashire road that I laid the 10½ foot curbstone which is regarded by others as a world's record."

Tree and Fence Climbing Part of Dog's Daily Life

LOS ANGELES.—Some day they'll move that big alligator's cage six feet south in the Los Angeles "gator farm's" backyard on Mission road, and Freckles, one-year-old fox terrier, will be the most surprised dog in the state of California.

Because it's Freckles' habit to climb trees.

In climbing trees in his master's garden, Freckles has extended his unique art to scaling an eight-foot fence separating the house from the alligator farm. He has won a pathway through a vine that covers the fence rail.

About 50 times a day, Freckles leaps lightly from tree to fence to the alligator farm.

Pop! He lands beside the cage of the largest, toughest, rip-snortin'-est 'gator in the whole establishment. That makes Freckles the only alligator-tree climbing-dog in America, his master thinks. But if the 'gator cage were six feet south, the pup would find himself right smack in the middle of it.

And Freckles ought to know better.

His master is Francis Earnest—who operates the farm!

Wife Is Very Surprised Husband Is Really 'She'

LOS ANGELES.—Mrs. Betty Higgins said she was very surprised when police informed her that her husband, Michael Higgins, 23, was a woman. She and Michael eloped four years ago.

Mrs. Della Harvey, who had lived with her daughter since her marriage, also was astonished.

"Why he—I mean she—has been a fine provider for Betty," she said. "And he—that is she—was always nice to me. I called her 'my boy.' The deception was discovered when a police psychiatrist became suspicious when he questioned the woman when a $10,000 shortage was reported at the garage where she worked.

Robins Trick Their Foe In a Three-Day Battle

CONNEAUT, OHIO.—Two robins and a woodpecker had a three-day battle while contesting each other's rights to establish a home in the entrance to a hollow limb.

The woodpecker had amply upholstered the hollow limb with cotton wadding. Then the bird left on a short trip.

When it returned, two robins had taken possession of the home site. The battle began. The woodpecker and the robins were alternately victorious.

Finally, the robins outwitted the woodpecker. They sealed up the entrance to the limb with mud and grass, keeping out their enemy.

POLICE PREFECT IS MADE FAMOUS FOR CLEANUP OF PARIS

Roger Langeron Is Known as Toughest of the City's Crime Hunters.

PARIS.—Pale-faced and bespectacled, bald-headed and slim, Police Prefect Roger Langeron is the "G-man No. 1 and Prosecutor Dewey" who is responsible for law and order in Paris.

Controller of 20,000 men, Langeron's actions defy his appearance. One would never take his derby hat, his black coat and the congenial air of a philosophical college professor as the habilitation of the toughest, most tenacious crime hunter and prosecutor the city of Paris has ever seen.

Active despite fragile health, which he forgets when "there is something up," Langeron knows exactly what is going on. He is usually on the scene of the smallest outbreak, or to supervise a job like protecting the king and queen of England.

With passage of the recent stringent laws regulating the stay of foreigners in France, Langeron has redoubled his efforts to clean up Paris of the spots and operators which have thrived on "shakedown methods."

Before the exposition last year Langeron created a racket squad to rid the town of "protection" gangs. Louis Lepree, operator of Chez Guernays, a night club in the fashionable Champs-Elysees district, was found murdered in his flat close by. It was said that he would not pay protection. Shortly afterward Chez Jean Tranchant, now the Bagatelle, closed its doors because Tranchant, well known singing entertainer, was afraid of the gang. Langeron's racket squad soon saw to it that no more murders were committed and no more operators intimidated.

Aid Knows Gangsters.

His first aid in this fight against crime is Inspector Maizaud, who knows every Montmartre and Montparnasse thief and gangster and makes it his business to know their whereabouts and activities.

As prostitution is a recognized profession in France, many undesirable are friends of the women who stroll the boulevards. It is part of Maizaud's job to keep visitors out of trouble with these underworld elements.

With the racket squad is the "Brigade Special," headed by alert 35-year-old Commissaire Roche. With a pleasing personality, Roche can be either as hard as a hickory stick or as smooth as an evening cape and a top hat, for his special duty is to circulate in select circles.

Much of Langeron's success since he assumed the post of police chief has been due to his expert subordinates. Langeron lives in the building of the Prefecture of Police on the Ile de la Cite. Even though his flat is just above headquarters, he never goes home as long as there is the slightest problem which needs his attention.

Loss of Sight Proves No Handicap to Carpentry

DALLAS.—James N. Simpson, 76 years old, is blind—but he needs no help in taking his lawn mower apart, repairing it and putting it together.

Not only that, but he is an expert carpenter, mows his lawn regularly, and spends most of his time doing odd work about his home here.

"A blind man can do almost anything that a man with sight can do," Simpson says, "but it takes him longer. All he needs is patience."

Simpson pointed out a new three-automobile garage he has just completed behind his home. Although he had no aid or advice, the structure was firmly put together, all supports and cover boards were in place. Simpson did all the sawing, fitting and nailing.

"No, I rarely hit my thumb with the hammer," he said. He exhibited 10 fingers free of mash marks and explained that he just hit a nail lightly until it was well in the wood, then hit it harder. He showed how he kept boards "squared" by sawing them against a box.

His chief aid in lawn-mowing is a 20-foot 2 by 4 board. He lays the board down on the grass and runs the mower the length of it with one wheel against the wood. Then he moves the board over one width of the mower and repeats the procedure.

Daanes Rest Up After an Exciting Day on the Farm

SHEBOYGAN FALLS, WIS.—James Daane drove his team into the farmyard and leaped from the wagon.

He landed on a silo filler belt. The belt broke, throwing Daane against a tractor and severely injuring his head.

His son, Howard, began to descend hastily from the silo. A ladder rung broke and he fell, bruising his shoulder.

The flapping filler belt frightened the horses. They ran away, jumped a fence, and broke their harness. The wagon was overturned.

Mrs. James Daane, recovering from an appendicitis operation, heard the commotion and hurried from the house. The strain put her back in bed.

The silo? It's O. K.

HER RATING

"This line denotes merriment, that one mirth, both are pronounced."

"In other words," said the husband, "she has what is known as a glad hand."

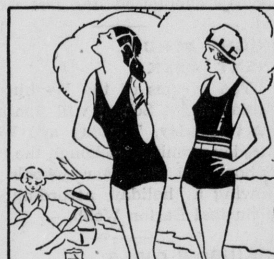

LIFE OF BUSINESS

"The new stenog is a beauty, isn't she?"

"Beautiful? I should say she is. You just ought to have heard the mushy way the grouchy old boss spoke to her."

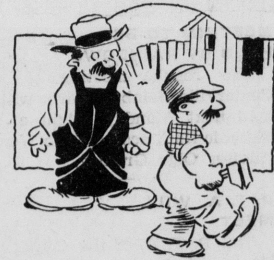

SUMMER THOUGHTS

"Doesn't your conscience bother you leaving your husband alone in the hot city?"

"I should say not. Only thing that worries me is to know what he's doing."

MODE OF THE MOMENT

Workman—When you cut our wages, you did it in style, didn't you?

Boss—Well, low-cut's the style just now—ask your wife!

GOOD FOR REDUCING

"Has your girl a good carriage, Tom?"

"G'wan, what would she want with a carriage?"

"Oh, I mean has she a good walk?"

"I'll say so—'bout two miles from the factory to her house—twice a day!"

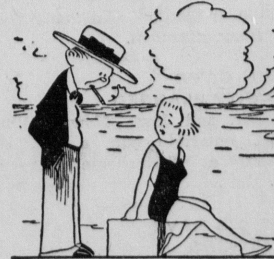

FINE PICKING

"How do you like the styles this year?"

"Fine, what with the one-piece bathing suits, and the sport shorts I'm having a great time."

JUST LIKE THAT

She—What's your idea of a "corking time?"

He—A time when the corks are flying.

Fitted, Lifted Waistlines

IF YOU want to have the very smart, tiny-waisted look, and to look slimmer than you are, by all means wear these two frocks, each with the high-at-the-middle line that emphasizes the slender, flattering silhouette. And if you want to wear really individual clothes, up-to-the-minute in fashion, of superior fabrics and becoming colors of your own selection, then make your own, with these very easy-to-follow designs, each of which is accompanied by a detailed sew chart.

Afternoon Dress.

Here's a lovely fashion that simply melts into your figure at the waistline, because the lifted midriff section is cut in one with the skirt panel in front. The bodice fits beautifully, thanks to scarcely perceptible gathers above the waistline, and darts on the shoulders. The sleeves fit the arm snugly, and are smartly high and Victorian at the shoulders. In velvet, satin, thin wool or silk crepe, this will be one of the most slenderizing, flattering frocks you ever put on!

Workaday Dress.

An unusually smart casual fashion is this one with the princess skirt cut up to a high waistline and topped by gathers that give fullness over the bosom, accentuating the slimmest of the skirt. Swirls of braid on the pretty sleeves, and a row of braid edging the round collar trim it 'up' just enough. Make this of gingham, calico or percale for home work, and in wool crepe, flannel or flat crepe for runabout.

The Patterns.

No. 1585 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39-inch material. With short sleeves, 4¾ yards; 1¼ yards trimming.

No. 1629 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4¾ yards of 35-inch material; 1½ yards braid.

Horse Sense About Winter Oil Change

Cold weather creates new problems in lubrication. To overcome damaging wear, the motor oil must possess three essential characteristics: (1) low cold test to assure quick easy starts (2) ability to lubricate at all driving speeds (3) durability to stand up for reasonable mileage. Curiously enough these requirements are contradictory in that to assure one factor it is very easy to unbalance another.

The only safe rule to follow in preparing your car for Winter is to buy the very best motor oil, Acid-Free Quaker State.

The refiners of Quaker State were pioneers in developing motor oils for Winter use. Today in four great modern refineries the most modern equipment and methods transform the finest Pennsylvania grade crude into motor oils which make automobiles, trucks and tractors run better, last longer, the year round.

The low cold test of Quaker State Winter Oil assures smooth easy starts. Its purity frees you of worry about sludge, carbon and corrosion. Its ability to stand up is unequalled . . . you go farther before you need to add a quart.

It is merely commonsense to practice economy. And the accumulated experience of car manufacturers, engineers, and most car owners proves that the use of high quality motor oil is genuine economy. It is conservatively estimated by authorities that 80 to 90 per cent of all repairs to an automobile are caused by faulty or incorrect lubrication.

A wise man once said: "It takes 12 months and sometimes longer to correct a mistake on a farm." Just so, five minutes running with the wrong oil in the engine of your car the first cold morning this Winter can cause more wear and damage than all the miles you drove this past Summer.

Play safe with your motor investment. Ask your dealer to prepare your car for Winter with Acid-Free Quaker State Winter Oil of the proper grade for your community.—Adv.

MAKE DEMOCRACY WORK

Forty million Americans exercising their right of democratic citizenship!

That is the real story of the recent election, a story more important than the columns of figures, the smiles of the winners, or the "we concede" of the losers. Once more America has demonstrated that democracy works, that the free selection of leaders is still a workable system of government in the land of the free.

Yet even as America again demonstrates her successful democracy, from across the sea comes a raucous laugh, a roaring cry of derision.

The scene is Weimar, Germany, where the Reich's first democracy was conceived. But it is no free leader of a free people who speaks. The voice that roars defiance to the world's democracies is the voice of force. The hand that accents the denunciations is the clenched fist of might and main.

When all the world was safe for democracy, the burden of our democratic citizenship was light. Today that dream of safety is shadowed by the fate of China, Spain, and Czechoslovakia. Today there is no place in the world for static do-nothingness. Today democracy must build or be destroyed. Its citizens must work or be overwhelmed.

The burden is on every citizen of America. We must forget the easy passiveness of the past. We must act to build a government of the people, by the people, and for the people that shall not perish from the earth.

The election is past! But its enthusiasm, spirit, and interest must not pass. If the democratic form of government is to remain the lodestone of freedom, America must make democracy work!

Mothers Told Of

Child Leadership

And Development

NILES — A more humorous viewpoint of the failings of "Bill and Mary" will probably result from Mrs. William Cox's discussion of parental education and development of a feeling of security in the child at last week's meeting of the Parent Teacher Association of the Niles Grammar School.

Mrs. Cox said that the P. T. A. was a good thing even if it did nothing but absorb the energies of mothers who were inclined to be overly careful of their children and thus rob them of the opportunity for self-development. She urged consistence of treatment, fairness and impartiality and the value of routine.

She suggested a need for "mezzanine floor" from which the family could be seen with an outsider's viewpoint.

"Don't break promises. Don't discuss finances too much before the children. Don't bring up past problems that have been settled. Allow the children to do things alone. Give them practice in social skills," she advised.

"The chief objection to children's quarreling is that it bothers the mother," Mrs. Cox said.

The P. T. A. donated a flag to the Niles Cub pack and set Dec. 13 as Cub night and Dads' night. A donation of $5 was also made to the Niles Boy Scouts.

A memorial membership in the name of Mrs. R. C. Day was taken in the Southern Alameda County Musical Association.

Tea was served by Mrs. R. Cozzi, Mrs. Harold Houghton, Mrs. George C. Roeding, Jr., and Mrs. A. B. Moore. A birthday cake was presented to Mrs. W. T. Lindsay.

SYNOPSIS

Richard Exon, a poor young Englishman, befriends elderly Matthew Gering, who at his death, gives him a statement claiming he, Gering, is Rudolph Elbert Virgil, Count of Brief, of ancient Austrian nobility who was betrayed 20 years before by his twin brother, Ferdinand, whose sentence for forgery he himself served. Ferdinand appropriated his title, property and daughter. Before he dies, Gering tells Exon there is a family secret, known only to the head of the house, to be found in the great tower at Brief, by a doorway none can ever find. Exon inherits his uncle's fortune and sets out to right Gering's wrongs. En route he encounters Percy Virgil, son of the villainous Ferdinand and sees him in conference with Inskip, a diamond merchant. He engages a valet, Winter, who hates Percy and meets by chance at a garage, John Herrick, who is a linguist and who as a youth served as a page at Gering's wedding. The girl, visited Brief. Herrick agrees to aid Exon. They establish headquarters at Brenda Revok's farm at Haven, a few miles from Brief and make their plans. They find the castle almost inaccessible. They see a closed car occupied by Percy Virgil, a chauffeur and a woman. Hearing a dog scream, they see the chauffeur flinging it, just as a horse with a girl astride bounds along the path and is felled by a string wire. The girl, unconscious, is picked up carelessly by the chauffeur and woman, who then run away, after dropping her. Exon rescues the girl and carries her to his waiting car. He identifies the girl as Elizabeth, daughter of the disowned Gering, tells her of her cousin's plot to abduct her and takes her to Haven, where he tells her the story of her father and promises to go the limit to help her right her father's wrongs. Elizabeth wins faith in her benefactor. Percy Virgil brings the police to Haven, announcing that two strangers are being sought for the kidnapping of Elizabeth. Herrick discomfited Virgil, tells of the morning's adventure, names a man called Max and hands the police a sealed envelope with the name of the leader in the abduction—Percy Virgil. Exon and Herrick suspect Percy of having sold the family jewels through Inskip. All realize the only solution is to find the Secret of Brief, which the impostor Ferdinand does not know. They decide to take possession of the Tower. Late one night after hard labor they force their way into the Tower, with Elizabeth aiding Exon and Herrick. There they begin their search for the secret doorway, working in silence against time. The search for the secret doorway is almost hopeless until they find a sliding panel in a step.

As might have been expected, the bolt was tight in its well, but it was not cemented in, and after another ten minutes I managed to wheedle it out.

I then took the mallet from Herrick and tapped the rise. At once the side I had tapped retreated before the blow, but the other side started forward out of its place.

"Pivoted," breathed Herrick. "It's hung on a spindle, just like a revolving door."

One hand on my shoulder, Elizabeth lowered her torch.

There was now before us a gap, where the rise had been. This gap was split into two by the rise itself, for this had simply been turned and was now presenting its edge, instead of its face. The torch immediately showed that the gap on the right was void—that is to say, on the side on which the rise had retired; but the gap on the left was framing a block of stone. And sunk in the face of this stone was a handle, or rude, iron dog . . .

"Go on," said Herrick. "Pull it. If a genie appears, so much the better. I've quite a lot of orders to give."

I laid hold of the dog and pulled . . .

At once the block slid forward, after the way of a drawer that you pull from a chest. And, as you may pull a drawer clear, so I drew the block out of its housing, over the tread of the step which lay, like an apron to take it, in front of the gap.

The block was immensely heavy, for it must have been 12 inches deep, and when I had drawn it clear, it was all I could do to lift it out of the way and on to the tread above.

To do this, I had to stand up and lift it between my legs; but the others stayed where they were.

As I laid it down—

"Do you see it, too?" said Herrick.

"I—I don't understand," breathed Elizabeth. "I mean, how can that be there?"

"What is it?" said I, and stepped back to go down on my knees.

"It's time we went home," said Herrick. "That's what it is. When I run into black magic, that's where I get off."

Never had idle words so specious a warranty.

The block which I had withdrawn had left behind it no room.

Though I make a fool of myself, at least I will make this clear.

When you pull a drawer from a chest and lay it aside, you leave in the chest a space which is very slightly larger than the drawer which you have removed. But, though I had drawn out the block, there was no such space left. In fact, the gap was now framing another block of stone which resembled exactly the one I had taken away, except that it had no handle by which it could be withdrawn. And when I presently touched it, the same indefinable tremor told me it was not fixed.

"Can you beat it?" said Herrick, shortly.

"On the face of it, no," said I. "But there must be some simple reason for such a thing. I mean, these doings are ancient: there's no machinery here."

"There can't be a reason," said Herrick, "unless you're a conjurer. If you pick a brick out of a wall, you've a right to expect a pecked out: but where's the reason?"

"There was a recess," said my lady. "There must have been. But now it's been filled."

"That's right," said I. "That's right. And I'll tell you another thing. It's got to be emptied again before we can put that block back in its place."

"Do you mean to suggest," said Herrick, "that a slab of stone of that size, fixed or unfixed, can shift to and fro on its own?"

"I have it," said Brenda's voice. "The thing is a counterpoise. My uncle has one at his farm. It is very old, but its movement is silent and sure as the flight of an owl."

Then was an electric silence.

Then—

"The girl's right," said Herrick. "And there's the conjuring trick. Beneath these steps there's a balance; and when you drew out that block you lightened one of its scales—with two results. One was that the scale you had lightened rose in the air, and thus revealed to our eyes the second weight on that scale. That is it, there—in the gap."

He got to his feet. "And the other result was this—that the opposite scale sank down—thus revealing somewhere or other the doorway we're trying to find."

That this interpretation was good, there could be no doubt, and we all began to go down the winding stair, surveying the walls, as we went, for some gap in their masonry. We were too much excited, I fear, to use our wits. Had we done so, we should have perceived that there was but one direction in which the balance could hang and that this would bring the scale which we wished to locate very nearly above the doorway by which we had entered the tower. However, as luck would have it, we now had no need of wits, but only of eyes; and as we emerged from the staircase into the small, square hall, we saw directly before us the interspace which we sought.

On the wall which faced us one of the panels had sunk—no very much, but five inches . . . exactly the height of the block which I had pulled out of the stair. The gap thus shown was breast-high and 15 inches in width. Beyond was an open space, and when I put in my hand, I could feel a faint current of air.

The panel hung on a chain, which was, of course, attached to the balance above. And so long as it hung on that chain, the panel could go no further, because the counterweight had no room to rise. So I took the weight of the panel, while Herrick deftly unfastened the heavy chain.

"Then I let the panel sink slowly into some slot in the stone . . ."

At last it came to rest, some six inches still protruding and making a sill to the doorway which we had discovered at last.

This gave to a winding stair, precisely resembling that upon which we had passed so many wearisome hours. In a word, with the hall for landing, the stair of the tower went on down, curling slowly right-handed, into the bowels of the earth.

For the others I cannot answer, but until the way was open and we were about to go down, I had never considered to what "the doorway" might lead; but now that we were about to discover the truth, I remembered the late Count's words and, with those for straw, began to make fabulous bricks.

"It may be that you can use it . . ."

I will not set down the pictures my fancy drew. Enough that they were all false. But I have this consolation—that not one man in a million would have predicted the scene which presently met our eyes.

Herrick declined to go down, but stayed in the hall with Brenda, "unless and until," said he, "my lady decides that she wants me in this act." So I preceded Elizabeth, torch in hand.

For 36 steps we went down. And then we came to a chamber that had no door.

On the threshold I stopped and lighted a second torch, and my lady looked over my shoulder, to see what I saw.

The chamber was small—some fifteen feet by eight, and some nine feet high. Its walls and floor and ceiling were all of stone, and though there was no window, the air was by no means foul. (This, I afterwards found, was due to two vents—one low down in a wall, and the other high up at the opposite end of the room: but though I sought for their mouths, I never was able to find them, because they were too well hid.) Towards one end of the cell was a great oak stall, plainly very ancient and finely carved, and against one wall was a coffer, also of oak. There was no other furniture.

In the stall was seated a man—or what was left of one. His pose was natural. His head was up and was leaning against the back of the stall, his arms lay along its arms, and his trunk and his feet were well and truly planted on oak and stone. His clothes were those of the Fifteenth century. His tunic was of diapered velvet which the passage of many years had brought to shreds and tatters, if not to dust, but a jeweled belt was still girding the crumbling loins and a chain was sunk in the ruin about the neck. His right hand hung upon the legs, which were skin and bone, and a patch, that had been a cap, was still crowning the thick fair hair. This was inviolate. The face and hands were withered, but otherwise well preserved and dead.

The eyes, which were wide, had a curious, sightless look and might have belonged to a man who was living, but blind; and the whole was in no way offensive, because, I suppose, there was no sign of corruption, but only of age. Indeed, had the hair been white, the figure would have been full of dignity; but the color of the hair was fatal, suggesting an old man's efforts to seem to be young—one of Time's shabbier jests, or the man had not seen old age.

On the coffer were lying three things. One was a skin of parchment—or part of a skin. Upon this had been written Latin, still to be read. By its side lay the translation, clearly inscribed upon vellum and made at some later date. And between the two lay a massive signet-ring.

As might have been expected, the documents told us the truth. "Here sits Elbert, Duke of Austria and Carinthia, King of Hungary, slain by his host and liegeman, Rudolf of Brief, because he came upon him defiling his wife."

"With the fear of death upon her, Helen of Brief declared the following facts: 'That the King and she were secretly married, before he wedded the Queen and before she deceitfully wedded Rudolf of Brief. In proof whereof she offered her marriage lines signed by the Cardinal Gaddi, lately dead of the plague, whom God reward,'"

"That the first and third of her children, whom Rudolf believed to be his, were both the sons of the King."

"Rudolf made haste to apprise the Queen of the truth."

"For the sake of that injured lady, he undertook, on conditions, to hold his peace. Between them it was agreed: 'That he should hold to his witness the corpse of the King, himself providing another to take its place and be interred and entombed as though it were that of the King.'

"That since Otto, whom he thought his first-born, was now IN TRUTH Duke of Austria and Carinthia, King of Hungary, he and his heirs should FOR EVER hold the right to call upon the heirs of her body in any stress, whose help they shall have WITHOUT FAIL by showing the King's great ring,"

"That her heirs shall be so instructed in perpetuity."

Street Car Blamed for Discharging Cartridge and Wounding Pedestrian

How a man could be shot on a downtown street in broad daylight with several persons walking within a few feet of him, and yet none of them seeing anybody shoot at him—this was the mystery that the police were called upon to solve when Christian Knoll received a bullet wound in the hip while walking through the business section of a leading metropolis, reports William C. Dudgeon in the Detroit News.

The first important fact that the officers discovered was that, while several had heard the report, none had seen any flash, indicating that the bullet must have come quite a distance. As Knoll had been shot in the side next to the pavement it seemed certain that the shot had been fired from across the street. This latter probability was not borne out, however, by the testimony of persons who had been walking on the other side of the street. In fact, they were all very positive in their assertions that the sound of the shot had come from the side of the street where the injured man had been at the time he was shot.

In their endeavor to reconcile these seemingly conflicting statements, the police were just about convinced that the shot had been fired from a passing automobile when word came from the hospital that the bullet, when it struck Knoll's hip, had been traveling an

"By Rudolf's order, Gollanx, a chemist of Innsbruck, preserved the corpse of the King. This he did according to a certain prescription which he had of a learned Venetian whose son he had saved. His raiment also he dipped against the corruption of Time."

"Dated the ninth day of March in the year of Our Lord one thousand four hundred and thirty-nine (the King being dead on the seventh, having lain in state till now and to be replaced this night) and written down word for word as my lord Rudolf hath commanded by his unworthy servant and clerk

"GABRIEL OF LITTAI."

"Whom I slue whiles his ink was wet for he hath a long tongue and I have need of a body as he hath said."

"RUDOLF OF BRIEF."

The original postscript was laboriously written in German and poorly spelt. The translation was done in German from first to last, and to this had been added two lists—one of the Lords of Brief and one of the several Heads of the other House.

Elizabeth was trembling. "Oh, Richard, do you know what this means?"

"It means you're a queen," said I. "But then I knew that before."

"No, no," she dabbled at the parchment. "That last name there. Not my grandfather's—the other. Harriet Vincentia Saling, Duchess of Whelp. She's still alive—and she's bigger than any queen. She's always known as 'Old Harry.' Her mother was English—as mine was, and if she'll take up my cause . . ."

"She must," said I. "It's a case of deep calling to deep."

"That's right," said I, feebly enough. With a sudden movement, I set a torch in her hand. "And now I'll go for a pen. You must write your name here at once. Shall Herrick come down?"

"I'll go please."

I left her there and mounted the unornamented stair.

The thing was absurd and childish, but now that I saw what was coming, my heart sank down. The "rough stuff" was over, and so my service was done. From now on, steps would be taken by a lady of high degree. Pressure would be put on the impostor: ways and means would be used which were out of my ken. And when the game had been won, I should be invited to Brief . . . where a servant would hold the door wide and another would take my hat. I should be ushered—I that had broken into the place, to set a queen on her throne . . . And then I should be presented to Her Grace the Duchess of Whelp, and the Countess of Brief would tell her how good I had been—I that had held a King's daughter against my hammering heart . . .

I suppose that my face was betraying my state of mind, for, as I stepped into the hall, I saw Herrick throw up his head and clap his hands to his eyes.

"Oh, I can't bear it," he groaned. "Don't say that after all this—"

APRIL SMOKE

By FRANCES HEATH
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

HE WAS waiting for her at the station that was little more than a cow shed.

"Mona darling, you came! I was afraid perhaps—"

"I promised, didn't I?"

"Yes, but—" he remembered other promises.

"Are you glad, Nick?"

For answer his lips met hers in a soft, sweet, child-like kiss which became less child-like as they clung together. "Darling," she murmured, "I'm completely mad about you."

"Ditto."

"But there's love lack of my madness. What's back of yours?"

"More madness." He tucked her arm through his. "I thought you might like to walk, it's such a swell morning. I left the car at the Inn."

"Only as far as the car." She indicated her high heels and silver foxed black suit. "I'm supposed to be shopping, you know, so I couldn't very well wear country clothes."

"Let's have a drink before we start . . . Couple of old fashioned," he told the bartender.

Later they stopped at a little white cottage for lunch.

They had their coffee on an old love seat overlooking the sea.

Mona's head dropped to Nick's shoulder. "Wish we were on that ship out there."

"Couldn't be any more fun than this is here."

"No, but it would be so final. Nick—when did you first feel this way about me?"

"When I first saw you in the candlelight across Harvey's dinner table."

"Were you surprised when I said I'd meet you in the speakeasy the next afternoon?"

"No. Well I was. I'd never done anything like that before. Nobody but you could have made me."

She rose abruptly. "We'd better be going. It's getting late and my train leaves at five."

Speeding back, they stopped once for a long breath-taking embrace. When he released her she breathed an ecstatic little "Jim."

It was a strained moment. At the Inn they went straight to the bar and downed old fashioned before they could forget her bad break.

"I'd better powder my nose and get ready."

She came back into the deserted Inn parlor. An arm reached out from the old horse hair sofa and pulled her down.

"You don't think I'm really going to let you go, do you?"

"I gotta go," she said mechanically, using the language of a four-year-old—a four-year-old boy with eyes and hair like her own. "I mean I really must."

But as she spoke she could hear the train roaring its way out of the little station.

The man at the bar was dialing his radio. At the arrival of the two new customers he hastily left it, forgetting to turn it off. A somber voice issued forth. "Please stand by. We have an important announcement to make."

"Shut it off," said Nick.

"Leave it on. I love special announcements. They're usually exciting."

The voice continued. "The four year old son of Judge James Graystone of New York city has disappeared. Judge Graystone has received several threatening letters from the Shatz gang and kidnapping is suspected!" The voice went on with a description of Jimmie Graystone.

Jim Graystone opened the door for her, before she could find her key.

"Jim, Jim!" She collapsed into his arms. "Where's our baby?"

"He's safe, Mona. No, you can't see him now. He's not to be disturbed. Calm yourself, my dear."

"How can I be calm, Jim? If you knew what I've been through."

"I've been through twice as much."

She looked up impatiently. "Tell me everything, quickly."

"I came home early thinking to take Jimmie and you to the park. I met Amy with him. She said you wouldn't be home until after eight and that you had left a note. I took your note and Jimmie to the park."

He went on. He had taken the letter from his pocket and read it slowly: "My dear—I've gone to Nick. I'm completely mad about him. I shall always love you dearly but Nick—however else I put it?—parades me. You couldn't want me around feeling this way about somebody else. We'll arrange about a divorce and you'll let me have Jimmie, won't you darling? I do love you—Mona."

Mona shuddered. "My God, did I actually write that drive!"

He folded the letter carefully and put it away. "When I finally understood what it meant I remembered Jimmie but he was gone, too. A policeman came by and I asked his help. I told him who I was. He asked me if I suspected kidnapping. And then my wonderful idea was born. Kidnaping. Radio. Mona."

Judge Graystone shook his dark head only slightly threaded with silver. "I wonder what I'll have to resort to next time to get you back."

"Why, Jim, I never left you before."

"Yes you have, often in your mind."

She shook her head emphatically. "You never wrote a letter before but don't you remember the date you had with Johnnie when I feigned illness? And the time you planned to be marooned with Nelson King and I circumvented it by hiring that damned sailboat and almost getting myself drowned?"

"Darling, I never realized—"

"You're a devising little wanton, Mona. That's why I've never felt justified in taking a poke at the men involved."

"Jim dearest, how much you must love me to have bothered!" Her eyes were twin lights burning brightly.

He read their message and took her roughly in his arms. "Yes, I love you. But I'll always wonder whether you're really worth all the trouble I take to try and keep you."

He kissed her—not tenderly. "And now so help me, I suppose I'll have to learn to paradise you, whatever that is."

Cockroach and Old-Timer

Most primitive of all winged insects and among the oldest of insect fossils is the cockroach, so familiar the world over that some scientists classify him as one of man's insect "messmates." He has been the subject of learned treatises. Poems and songs have been written to celebrate him in the variety of his 1,200 species. Tall tales in the Paul Bunyan tradition relate that on some ships sailors wear gloves when sleeping to keep cockroach hordes from gnawing off their finger-nails.

Cleopatra's War Trumpet

Cleopatra used sistrum at the battle of Actium and the sistrum was thus satirically called Queen Cleopatra's war trumpet. It was an ancient Egyptian percussion instrument with indefinite musical pitch, a kind of metal rattle. It consisted of an oval metal frame fastened to a handle and crossed by four metal horizontal rods passing through holes large enough to allow them to rattle when shaken.

Origin of Puzzles

The origin of puzzles goes back to the beginning of civilization. The construction of anagrams, for instance, is of great antiquity, its invention being ascribed to the Jews. They were known to the Greeks and Romans and popular throughout Europe during the Middle Ages. Acrostics, too, were common among the Greek and Latin writers at a very early period. Another ancient nation much interested in puzzles is China.

Gave Up Making Cotton Gins

Eli Whitney (1765-1825) invented the cotton gin, for separating seeds from fiber; but he had to spend so much in defending his patent that he gave up manufacturing gins and started (at Whitneyville, Conn.) a factory for making firearms, which was very successful. Others than he made money on the cotton gin.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.
